The Stuart Feakins Trust aims to work with young people in Hackney to enable them to experience new things, define their aspirations and help give them the tools to achieve them.

We work with and support local organisations in reaching the young people in Hackney who have the least opportunities. We support innovative, active and fun ways to achieve these objectives; reflecting Stuart's passions for sport, film, music and outdoor activities to bring about real and positive change.

We hope you will be able to join us on the night to support this worthwhile cause.

The Stuart Feakins Trust was set up in memory of Stuart who loved life. He extracted the last ounce of value out of every day and had an insatiable appetite to learn and experience new things. More than that he wanted to share his love for life with others. He was dedicated to working with young people in Hackney who had not enjoyed the opportunities he had.

Stuart loved anything and everything. He loved music and sport- particularly football. He loved travelling, getting back to nature and hanging out with mates.

To Stuart, football wasn't only about the match. It was about the camaraderie and friendships made before and after games. This was more important than the result. Stuarts other great joy was music. He pursued it with the boyish enthusiasm that characterised his life. He would often have two or three places to go on any given night and he'd usually manage to make an appearance at all of them. He couldn't bear the thought of missing out on a good time.

Stuart wanted to provide the very best support to young people in Hackney. He believed in making a difference – however great or small. One of his amazing qualities was his ability to really listen to, and understand young people, share their passions and help them realise their own ambitions.

Stuart died 2nd January 2008 aged 41. The Stuart Feakins Trust aims to capture some of Stuart's joy of life and commitment to young people in Hackney.
